GLENSTONE MUSEUM

Located in Potomac, Maryland, this private museum—open by appointment only—houses the modern and contemporary art collection of billionaire industrialist Mitchell P. Rales and his wife, Emily Wu Rales. The museum opened as a single building on 100 acres in 2006 but has been expanding ever since. A recently completed major expansion, added 50,000 square feet of gallery space in a 204,000-square-foot structure called “the Pavilions.” Inspired in part by the Ryoan-ji Zen temple in Kyoto, Japan, the Pavilions surrounds a 18,000-square-foot water garden containing thousands of aquatic plants such as waterlilies, irises, thalias, and cattails.

In addition to the Pavilions, the expansion added 130 acres of land, much of it woodlands and wildflower meadows. Inside the museum, the artwork covers the spectrum of post-WWII luminaries—from Willem de Kooning, Jackson Pollock, and Jasper Johns to Robert Rauschenberg, Cy Twombly, and Ruth Asawa. As a critic for The Washington Post wrote in October 2018, “Glenstone [manages to] integrate art, architecture, and landscape. Everything is quietly spectacular.”
